

Ripening

When they arrive in the United States, they are still green. In large warehouses, bananas are gassed with ethylene to restart the ripening process so they are bright yellow in the stores.

Ripening

When they arrive in the United States, they are still green. In large warehouses, bananas are gassed with ethylene to restart the ripening process so they are bright yellow in the stores.

Ripening

When they arrive in the United States, they are still green. In large warehouses, bananas are gassed with ethylene to restart the ripening process so they are bright yellow in the stores.

Ripening

When they arrive in the United States, they are still green. In large warehouses, bananas are gassed with ethylene to restart the ripening process so they are bright yellow in the stores.

